In Brief

Course deals with disabled

A Svensen resident who has trained parents to be advocates for handicapped and disabled children will teach a set of classes this fall at Clatsop Community College.

Candy Sollars will teach "Special Education Law," focusing on state and federal legislation and ways for parents to communicate effectively with educators, psychologists, medical professionals and agencies on behalf of handicapped and disabled children.

The class runs 6-9 p.m. on Mondays, from Sept. 27 through Nov. 1, in Room 105 of Towler Hall.

The other class, "Identification of Disabilities," will be in the same location and at the same hours on Nov. 15, 18, 22 and 29 and on Dec. 6 and 13.

The identification class will survey indicators of several disorders that accompany mental retardation and learning disabilities, including some that are "hidden" and somewhat difficult to identify.

Each class will cost $26 for each person enrolled, Sollars said, but the parent-couple price will be $35 a class. Prospective participants may contact the college, 325-0910, or Sollars, 458-6642, for more information about class content and registration instructions.

Bicyclists collide, 1 taken to hospital

WARRENTON — A collision between two bicyclists sent one to the hospital with a possible broken leg Thursday night.

Geraldo Miller, 31, no address available, was treated in the Columbia Memorial Hospital emergency room in Astoria and released after the accident reported at 10:12 p.m. on Northwest Warrenton Drive by the M. Nygaard Logging Co. yard.

The other person involved in the accident was identified as Tim Burke, 20, no address available.

No other information was available from the Warrenton Police Department because the investigating officer had not turned in a written report.

Red Cross slates first aid classes

The Clatsop County Chapter of the American Red Cross has set its schedule of classes for this month.

Standard first aid classes will be offered in Astoria and Seaside, as well as an Infant/Child CPR class later in the month in Astoria.

The standard first aid class trains students in both adult CPR and first aid. Two certificates are awarded to those who successfully complete the class. Individuals needing only Adult CPR are welcome to register for that section only. Course fee for a complete class is $27.50 paid in advance or $35.00 at the door. Dates and times are as follows:

Sept. 13, 14, 6-10 p.m. at the Astoria Red Cross;

Sept. 22, 23, 6-10 p.m. at the Seaside Community Center;

Sept. 25, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Astoria Red Cross.

The Infant/Child CPR class will be held Tuesday, Sept. 28, from 6 to 10 pm. It is designed for those persons who supervise and care for children under 9 years of age. Primary emphasis is given to hands-on practice. Course fees are $16 paid in advance or $25 at the door.

Preregistration is required for all classes, class size is limited. Astoria classes will be held at the American Red Cross, 714 Exchange St. Seaside classes will be held at the Seaside Community Center, 1225 Avenue A. To preregister or for more information, please call 325-4721 or 738-3311.

BULLETIN

Trullenger Family Descendants Sought — The Oswego Heritage Council is looking for descendants of John Corse Trullenger, 1828-1901. Among his achievements, he founded the West Shore Mills, and in 1885, Astoria's first electric light plant. Members of his family are invited to the unveiling and dedication of a bronze plaque honoring his contributions to the founding of Lake Oswego. The ceremony is Friday at 5 p.m. at Ladd and Durham streets in Lake Oswego. Call C. Harold Campbell, president of the council at 636-4833, or write the council at PO Box 1041, Lake Oswego, Ore. 97034.

A piece of history, one brick at a time

Warrenton begins Lighthouse Park project Friday with fund-raising event

By CATHY PETERSON
Of The Daily Astorian

WARRENTON — Supporters of the Lighthouse Park Interpretive Center intend to build their project brick by brick.

Friday marks the kickoff of the Warrenton Deep Sea Fishermen's Benefit Fund buy-a-brick fund-raiser for the center. Construction of the project is slated for this fall, to be completed in summer 1994.

The center will include a 42-foot-tall replica of a lighthouse. The structure will be 18 feet in diameter at the base. A building will be attached to the lighthouse for additional display space. The center is also intended as a museum focusing on the history of the local fishing industry.

LIGHTHOUSE PARK is at the intersection of Main Street and Fort Stevens Highway.

Bricks can be purchased for between $25 and $150, depending upon the size of the brick and the amount of lettering on it. The bricks will be used to pave a walkway on the park's grounds. City Planner Janet Wright said that members of the Warrenton Business Association are urged to purchase bricks on behalf of this project.

Reproductions of the center's architectural plans are also available for $20, Wright said.

The interpretive center is a longtime project of the Deep Sea Fishermen's Benefit Fund. The non-profit group maintains an emergency fund to assist fishermen and their families in times of crisis.

The city of Warrenton, the Warrenton Garden Club and the Pacific Rebekah Lodge 234 are also working on the project.

THE FUND-RAISER coincides with the fishermen's fund's annual Fish Fry. The event is from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. Friday and noon to 8 p.m. Saturday.

For more information about the interpretive center or to purchase bricks, call 325-4062 or 861-1233.

FOG WALK

A couple takes a stroll on in-line skates down the Prom in Seaside earlier this week amid thick fog. Despite the nice weather in much of the county, the beach in Seaside has remained fogged in for most of each day. According to the National Weather Service, the hot air in the Willamette Valley creates a low pressure area, and a high pressure area off the coast traps the cool, moist air along the beach. The patter is typical for late summer.

Area youth sought for D.C. program

A scholarship and trip to the nation's capitol in line for the winners.

U.S. Sens. Mark Hatfield and Bob Packwood announced recently that selection of two Oregon high school students to participate in the 32nd annual U.S. Senate Youth Program is under way.

Selection from a list of juniors and seniors — who will be student body officers during the 1993-94 school year — will be made by Oregon school superintendent Norma Paulus in cooperation with high school principals.

Hatfield and Packwood are expected to announce Dec. 1 the Oregon students who will participate in the program Jan. 29 through Feb. 5, 1994.

Students selected will do an intensive, weeklong study of the Senate and the federal government in Washington, D.C. Students will also receive $2,000 college scholarships for additional study of American government and related subjects.

They will watch their senators in action, attend briefings with leading senators, Cabinet members and a U.S. Supreme Court justice, attend a mock joint session of Congress on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives, visit the White House and possibly visit with President Clinton.

Since the program was founded in 1962, two student body officers from each state and the District of Columbia have participated annually. Delegates from overseas Department of Defense Schools were added in 1982. The William Randolph Hearst Foundation pays for the program, and no government funding is involved.

Oregon students interested in being considered as delegates should contact Don Perkins, Student Services Specialist, Oregon Department of Education, 8700 Pringle Parkway S.E., Salem, 97310-0290. The phone number is 378-5585.

school. The shop will open Monday. The two teachers saw the opportunity for this business while engaged in the school, and decided to open the shop, with every convenience for the high school students.

Hugh Brady, the man who for a half century has devoted a greater part of his time to hunting through the mazes of tide, current and eddy for those who have succumbed to the grip of the water, is not unacquainted with conditions in the Columbia River, where he is now engaged in searching for the body of Pat Allen, prominent Portlander, who was drowned recently following a speed boat accident. Fifty-four years ago, in 1869 to be exact, Brady, then at a tender age, fished in the Columbia River at Astoria. Since that time he has had many experiences and has won wide fame for his ability to solve the problems that are evolved following deaths by drowning. "I have always been ready to help out," said Mr. Brady yesterday. "Many a time I have 'hustled' grain all day and then spent the night searching for some poor unfortunate. More than once I have fallen asleep while at work. I have answered calls at all hours, and through long experience have developed a sort of an instinct for the work. Once I hunted for forty days for a body, and finally I found it. Most grapplers have trouble in raising an unclothed body, but I have developed an apparatus that will bring them up as easily as if they were clothed."

A public stenographer's office is to be opened immediately by Bert Grush, well known in Astoria from 20 years residence here. Mr. Grush will write letters, take dictation, copy manuscripts and audit books, in his office at 252 Bond Street in the Midway Cafe. Mr. Grush has been connected wi the post office here, with the street railway, and with the Port docks during his residence in Astoria. Astorians will not forget the solicitude of the Japanese at the time of the great fire of last winter, nor will they overlook the donation of $1200 by these same Japanese at the time, according to members of the committee in charge of relief work for the disaster stricken people around Tokyo following the massive earthquake which occurred there yesterday. The campaign, which is to be completed by Monday night, according to latest instructions, is not progressing as rapidly as could be desired, members of the Citizens committee stated Friday night. They urge that every citizen and resident of Astoria give his share in the allotment of $1800 assigned to this county.

There's no avoiding trash collection

Astoria City Council says that no resident can be exempt from the pick-up services

Sorry, but universal garbage collection is the rule in Astoria.

The Astoria City Council decided Tuesday not to waive garbage pick-up for two residents who recently asked not to have to pay for the service. One person told city staff that he spends little time in the city and eats at restaurants most of the time.

The other request for the service exemption came from a woman who said she recycles most of her solid waste and takes the rest to the transfer station.

The city requires universal garbage pickup "in the interests of public health and safety." The city does not have a history of granting the exemptions, Finance Director JOHN SNYDER said in a memo to the council.

City Councilor SUE BORGARDT noted that the city is in the middle of negotiating its recycling contract with a garbage-hauling company and looking at performing a rate study.

"We're working on incentives to make garbage service less expensive for those who recycle more," Borgardt said.

More recycling bins coming

Speaking of recycling, the city of Astoria plans to buy 3,500 more red plastic recycle bins to boost collections in the city.

The bins, which will be purchased for $3.55 each from a California-based company, Tulip Corp., are made with 25 percent recycled plastic. They will have a recycling logo stamped on the side with lettering identifying them as property of the city of Astoria Recycling Program and a phone number for information.

The total cost for the bins will come to $12,425. The bin purchase is part of the 3R Committee's Discard Management Plan that the committee came up with last year. One of the first goals of the plan is to distribute recycling bins to all Astoria garbage customers. The money for the bins will come from the city's recycling fund.

To meet state standards, the city has set a goal for itself that 25 percent of the city's garbage is recycled.

Tree salvage plan OK'd

The M. Nygaard Logging company will salvage 120,000 board feet of trees that have blown down on city of Astoria land near Emerald Heights.

The Astoria City Council voted Tuesday to accept a bid of $351.45 per thousand board feet from the logging company. That will bring in about $42,000 for the city.

Several city councilors expressed concern about the tree salvaging. City staff had suggested including an additional 30 trees standing near the blow-down area because they are in danger of falling during high winds. The estimated 30 trees would represent about 30,000 board feet.

However, Borgardt said that trees are a "very touchy subject" in Astoria and that she did not support cutting the standing trees.

Councilor DOUG THOMPSON, a longtime advocate of trees in Astoria, voted in favor of salvaging the fallen trees but not the standing trees.

But he said the fallen trees should be viewed not only in economic terms but in terms of their environmental value in restoring the site.

"My belief is that nature wastes absolutely nothing," Thompson said.

Planning session

The Astoria Planning Commission is holding a public work session at noon Wednesday on tree cutting and preservation.

The session will be held in the Astoria City Hall Council Conference Room, 1095 Duane St.

Classroom in the park

The Astoria City Council Tuesday approved a request from the Astoria School District to put a modular classroom on part of Evergreen Park, city-owned land behind Astoria Middle School.

The classroom is about 28 feet wide by 48 feet long and would be placed at the northwest portion of the upper section of the park. The unit would extend about 20 feet into city property. Work is expected to be completed by Nov. 19.

LORAN MATHEWS, the director of support services for the district, told the City Council that the district would also be willing to help the city put in a sand volleyball court. Borgardt, a longtime volleyball enthusiast, said she was eager to help with the court project.
